Brief

Hong Kong has a unique local culture. There are many religious beliefs here, with Buddhist and Taoist temples flourishing, and Western religions also have a wide range of followers. The food is rich and varied. In tea restaurants, silky milk tea is paired with crispy pineapple buns; in the streets and alleys, the aroma of roast meat and the delicious seafood are everywhere. Traditional festivals are lively, with dragon and lion dances during the Spring Festival and colorful lanterns during the Mid-Autumn Festival. The residents are warm and hospitable, and there is also a strong warmth in the fast-paced life, showing a unique charm.

Why Go Here

- A fusion of Chinese and Western cultures
- A feast of food in heaven
- A dazzling night view of Victoria Harbour
- Convenient shopping and consumption
- A dreamy theme park

Eating

Hong Kong is a "food paradise" with a diverse and fascinating food culture. In the roast meat shop, the roast goose has crispy skin and tender meat, and the barbecued pork is sweet and tasty. Street snacks are equally exciting, with crispy egg waffles on the outside and tender on the inside, and fragrant; fish balls are chewy and roll in the curry sauce to create a rich flavor. In the tea restaurant, the silky milk tea is smooth and mellow, and the pineapple bun is sweet and delicious, showing the Hong Kong style.

◆ Fish Balls 鱼蛋

It is made by chopped eel, shark or freshwater fish, added with sweet potato flour and mixed evenly, and then wrapped with lean pork or shrimp fillings. It is round in shape, chewy in texture and delicious in taste. The common way to eat it is to soak it in curry sauce or satay sauce and heat it.

◆ Shrimp Dumplings 虾饺

A classic of Hong Kong-style dim sum, it is made of translucent rice noodles wrapped with delicious shrimps. It has a chewy, tender and juicy texture and is usually eaten with soy sauce to highlight its deliciousness.

◆ Chicken Casserole 鸡煲

Chicken is the main ingredient, with seasonings such as onion, ginger and garlic, and stewed slowly in a clay pot. The chicken is tender and tasty, and the soup is thick and fragrant. Vegetables, mushrooms and other ingredients can be added.

◆ Siu Mei 烧味

Select high-quality pork tenderloin or pork tenderloin, marinated and then roasted, the meat is firm and chewy, with rich honey sauce. In addition, roasted dishes also include roast goose, roast duck, suckling pig, etc., with crispy skin, tender and juicy meat, and overflowing fragrance.

◆ Claypot Rice 煲仔饭

Put rice and various ingredients (such as cured meat, chicken, beef, etc.) into a clay pot and cook them. A layer of golden and crispy rice crust will form at the bottom, which is fragrant and has a rich taste.

◆ Egg Waffles 鸡蛋仔

Hong Kong's unique traditional street snack is a variation of waffles. The fresh fragrance of eggs and the pure fragrance of milk are perfectly combined. The aroma of baked egg waffles is overflowing and wafting all over the street.

◆ ineapple Butter 菠萝油

After baking, the surface is golden yellow, and the bumpy crispy crust looks like a pineapple, hence the name. Cut the hot pineapple buns just out of the oven horizontally and put a piece of cold butter in it, and you will get the pineapple buns that the Hong Kong cartoon character McDull loves to eat.

◆ Steamed Vermicelli Roll 肠粉

Vermicelli is a common food in traditional Hong Kong restaurants. It has a delicate and smooth taste and is usually eaten for breakfast. It can be paired with condiments such as sesame sauce, sweet sauce or hot sauce and is deeply loved by people.

◆ Barbecued Pork Buns 叉烧包

Barbecued pork buns are a classic Hong Kong delicacy. The soft fermented dough is skillfully pinched into a birdcage shape. After being steamed, the top naturally cracks open, revealing the delicious barbecued pork filling, which has a strong flavor and rich taste.

◆ Wonton Noodles 云吞面

Wonton noodles are a classic and representative noodle dish in Hong Kong, carrying the essence of Hong Kong food culture. The noodles are made of bamboo noodles, which are pressed by traditional bamboo poles, and are chewy and smooth. Wontons are the soul of the dish. The paper-thin dough wraps the fillings of shrimp and pork. Each one is plump and translucent, and the sweet juice overflows when it is bitten. The soup base is made of pork bones, dried fish and other ingredients, which are simmered slowly for several hours. The soup is clear but mellow, with a slight sweet aftertaste. Chives are dotted in between, adding a touch of freshness.
